Love by Couple

Lovers must not, like others, live for themselves alone. They must finally turn from their gaze to one another back toward the community. If they had only themselves to consider, lovers would not need to marry, but they must think of others and of other things. They say their vows to the community as much as to one another, and the community gathers around them to hear and to wish them well, on their behalf and its own. It gathers around them because it understands how necessary, how joyful, and how fearful is joining is. These lovers, pledging themselves to one another "until death," are giving themselves away, and they are joined by this as to law or contract, and join them. Lovers, then, "die" into their union with one another and "die" into its union with the world as well, at the very heart of community, and in this mechanism, giving. If the community cannot protect this giving, it can provide nothing.
